Awaji Island

Collecting and providing precise information

Awaji Island offers a variety of activities for visitors staying overnight or on day trips.

“In addition to creating a booklet that compiles barrier-free information on the island, we’re also gathering more detailed information, such as whether elevators are available or not,” says Secretary General Yasuho Fukuura of the Awaji Island Tourism Association.

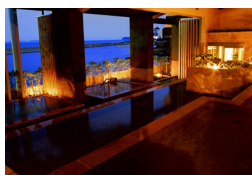

Looking ahead, the association aims to compile the collected information on a website and in a booklet, creating an environment where anyone can easily access the information they need. “We’re also considering hosting seminars to provide information. We hope to create opportunities for everyone to feel comfortable going out.”

The island also offers a wealth of experience-based activities that take advantage of its natural features, including local industries such as roof tile and incense making, salt making, indigo dyeing, and harvesting a variety of local foods.
